

ABSTRACT

A surgical jig defines an axis relative to a body part and includes a support, a first guide element mounted on the support and a second guide element mounted on the support. Each guide element includes a guide channel and the guide channels between them define a substantially linear jig axis.